to train the platoon more effe-tive and to get acquainted closer with the ~~life~~ and character of the soldiers. He picked any man out of every squad and entrusted him with the duties of the agitator. These helped him by staying on their comrades, making friends with them and reported the way of thinking, relation etc of the troops.

Unit service leader Through the battalion supply branch ~~he kept~~ the unit provided with food clothing arms and ammunition furniture horse and fodder. The unit service leader usually was an NCO but at a certain period enlisted personnel was trained for this job also.

He was superior in command to every troops and nco at the unit. He was responsible for the order in the quarters the cleanliness of the soldiers and their physical condition. He daily supervised the dependability of the arms, the patrol ammunition sent by the "supervisor" the equipment of the troops, the inner quarters and the area and the work of the cooks. He had the squad-leaders hear the morning-inspection daily. He taught the grooms and dog leaders and supervised their work constantly. In every problem involving material, he helped the unit co. with his advice.

He was on overseeing duty for 4 hrs. daily.
He had under him the supply duty clerk 3 grooms
